Librarians Helping Journals Cut Corporate Ties

Brian Cody, Scholastica Danielle Padula, Scholastica

Why this session?

Why relevant to LPForum

- Resources to support OA journal publishing beyond library programs
- Need to communicate complex dynamics of serials crisis
- O Action steps for LPs of all sizes

White paper contributors

Björn Brembs, Professor of Neurogenetics at the University of Regensburg and OA advocate

Dan Morgan, Digital Science Publisher at University of California Press

Roxanne Missingham, Australian OA Support Group Deputy Chair

Stevan Harnad, Professor in the Department of Psychology at Université du Québec à Montréal, Green OA advocate

Is There a Serials Crisis Yet? Between Chicken Little and the Grasshopper | Peer to Peer Review

By Dorothea Salo on 📃 June 19, 2014

Summer lets me teach my favorite course, the rundown of what's going on with several publishing industries and how libraries are riding the rapids. (It's actually a course in environmental awareness and handling change, but such skills are much easier to teach given a concrete context in which to exercise them.) As I tore through syllabus and lecture revisions earlier this month to clear time for other necessary work, I found a few spare milliseconds to wonder whether the serials crisis, which hasn't felt like an immediate, all-hands-on-deck crisis in some time, might finally be heating up into one. Academic publishing Of goats and headaches

One of the best media businesses is also one of the most resented

May 26th 2011

HOW much would you pay for an annual subscription to Small Ruminant Research, Queueing Systems or Headache? University librarians pay rather a lot. In Britain, 65% of the money spent on content in academic libraries goes on journals, up from a little more than half ten years ago. With budgets tight, librarians are trying to resist price increases. But Derk Haank, the chief executive of Springer, a big publisher, is firm: "We have to make a living as well."

And what a living it is. Academic journals generally get their articles for nothing and may pay little to editors and peer reviewers. They sell to the very universities that provide that cheap labour. As other media falter, academic publishers have soared. Elsevier, the biggest publisher of journals to chew on

The corporate budget drain

- Raising bundle prices by 5-7% a year (Bergstrom et al.)
- Profit margins estimated to be between 20 and 30% (Van Noorden)
- Average APC has increased by 6% over the past two years (Shamash)

Open Access alone can be an evolution of the serials crisis - not necessarily a full solution

Question:

Why are corporate publishers able to raise prices so drastically?

Corporate control can be upended.

The nonprofit sector must regain control of journals
